

AFL-CIO Endorses Policy in Viet Nam

1965 New York Times News Service SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. — The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations Wednesday pledged its "unflinching support" of "all measures the administration might deem necessary to halt Communist aggression and secure a just and lasting peace" in Viet Nam.

The pledge, coupled with support for efforts to negotiate a settlement of the war, was in line with the federation's previous strong backing for administration policy.

Wednesday's statement appeared to go beyond the past commitment by promising in advance to support any administration action in the war. Some liberal union leaders said they thought this unwisely gave President Johnson a blank check in the war, and they privately expressed dismay about it.

The Viet Nam statement, in a resolution passed without audible dissent at the closing session of the AFL-CIO convention here, represented a compromise worked out behind the scenes between AFL-CIO president George Meany and Walter P. Reuther, United Automobile Workers Union president.

Authoritative sources said the compromise was achieved without an open fight after Vice-President Humphrey indicated to the union leaders last week that the Johnson administration would not like to see a controversy erupt on the floor.

The convention was notably free of the acrimony and open conflict that has marred previous AFL-CIO meetings. Several union leaders said this was a hopeful sign for the federation's future. But some also questioned whether the convention had done anything significant to solve the problems of stagnation and drift that critics contend afflict it.

The Viet Nam war was a dominant topic at the convention, which warmly applauded speeches supporting administration policy by Humphrey, Secretary of State Dean Rusk and U. Alexis Johnson, deputy undersecretary of state for political affairs.

Propaganda Distributed Under Rules

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Small amounts of Communist Chinese propaganda about the Viet Nam war are being distributed in this country under little-known provisions of U.S. import licensing regulations.

Pamphlets accusing the United States of "aggression" in Viet Nam turned up among a few demonstrators at an antiwar protest march here last month. Other publications have been put on sale in a Madison, Wis., bookstore.

State Department officials said this week presence of the printed material is perfectly legal. They have no plans to discourage present exchanges of written material between the United States and Red China.

No U.S.-Chinese agreement covers this flow. But since the Communists came to power in China in 1949 both countries have followed parallel policies permitting it.

Communist China is free to purchase books, magazines, newspapers and trade and technical journals in the United States. At one time the Russians did most of Peking's book purchasing here. But in recent years, as Soviet-Chinese relations became strained, the Chinese have used their own purchasing agents.
